1 Introduction

This template has been changed from the one provided in RSPI. It contains suggested main section headings, and example content illustrating the use of subsections, references, figures, tables and equations.

Front page data (title, name, studentID, etc) can be entered in the first section of main.tex, by replacing the placeholder values in the following lines:

Module code should be MHW225671 for full time students, MHW226542 for Graduate Apprentices.

The introduction section should describe the background and motivation for your project, citing appropriate sources, and state the research question (or problem statement), project aim and objectives and hypothesis if appropriate.

1.1 Project Background

1.2 Project Overview

1.2.1 Project Outline

1.3 Project Objectives

2 Literature and technology review

2.1 Secondary objective 1

The subsections of your literature and technology review should correspond to your secondary research objectives. This should be an in-depth review that provides the foundation for your research method and execution.

2.2 Secondary objective 2

Your review should cite a comprehensive set of sources as evidence to support your analysis (Smith and Jones 2012). As Jones and Smith (2013) said, reliable sources constitute the evidentiary foundation of research, distinguishing rigorous inquiry from unsupported assertion(Other 2014). Your sources should be stored in BibTex format, with appropriate keys, in the file references.bib.

3 Project's Primary Research Methods

This section will give a detailed overview on the methods that will be used to carry out the remainder of the project and provide a reasonable conclusion to the problem statement.

This section will also outline what work has been completed up to this point and all future work that will be carried out over the project's lifetime.

3.1 Technical methods

3.1.1 Theme 1

3.1.2 Theme 2

3.1.3 Theme 3

3.1.4 Theme 4

3.2 Preliminary work
